

Landscapes of Dane County, Wisconsin

Take a geologic tour of Dane County with Landscapes of Dane County, Wisconsin, newly published by the Wisconsin Geological and Natural History Survey.

In the booklet, the author explains how vast ancient seas, torrential rivers, persistent winds, and gigantic masses of ice have shaped the natural landscapes seen in today's Dane County. Descriptions of the geologic causes of what can be seen are followed with an exploration of the parts of the county that showcase specific landscape features.

Geologic contrasts are readily apparent on the full-color map that accompanies the booklet. The map also highlights the locations of many parks that allow the user to see where the county's easily accessible public spaces lie in relation to the geology.

The beautifully illustrated, 40-page booklet is a handy size (approximately four by nine inches), easy to carry in your glove compartment or tuck into a backpack; the map folds for storage in the back of the booklet. The pair is priced at $8, plus applicable sales tax.

The Wisconsin Geological and Natural History Survey, a part of the University of Wisconsin-Extension, has the principal assignment among state agencies to survey Wisconsin's geological, mineral, and soil resources and shares the responsibility of surveying water and biological resources; the Survey also sells technical and educational reports and maps.
